

Creating a Private Subnet

Arpita Chowdhury

Introducing Today's Project!

What is Amazon VPC?

Amazon VPC is a logically isolated virtual network in AWS where you can launch and manage your resources securely. It is useful because it lets you control your networking environment including IP address ranges, subnets, route tables, internet gateways, and security settings so you I design secure, scalable architectures that meet your application's requirements.

How I used Amazon VPC in this project

In today's project, I used Amazon VPC to create a private subnet, route table and network ACL.

One thing I didn't expect in this project was...

One thing I didn't expect in this project is to create a private network ACL.

This project took me...

This project took me 1 hour to complete.

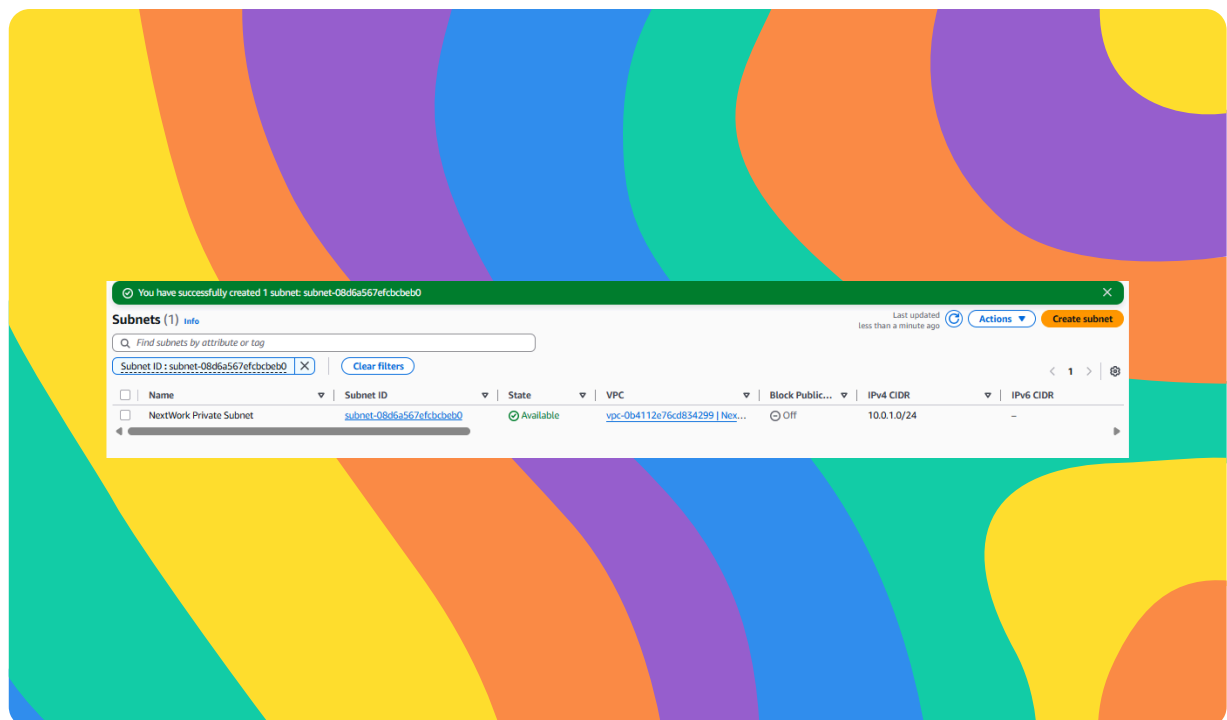

Private vs Public Subnets

The difference between public and private subnets is that a public subnet has a route to an Internet Gateway, allowing its resources to communicate directly with the internet, while a private subnet does not, keeping its resources isolated from direct internet access.

Having private subnets are useful because private subnets exist to provide an extra layer of security by keeping critical resources off the public internet.

My private and public subnets cannot have the same CIDR block address.

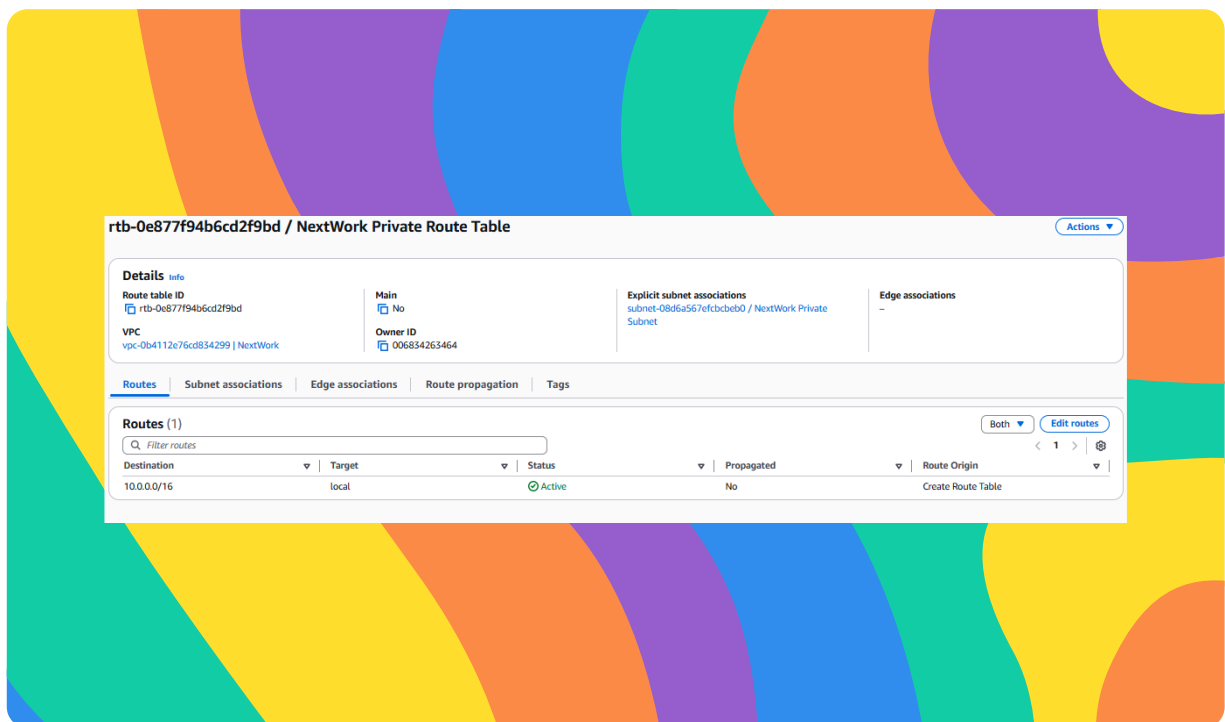

A dedicated route table

By default, my private subnet is associated with NextWork private route table that I have created.

I had to set up a new route table because it makes sure it can only direct traffic to another internal resource (instead of the public internet)

My private subnet's dedicated route table only has one inbound and one outbound rule that allows local VPC traffic (the local route).

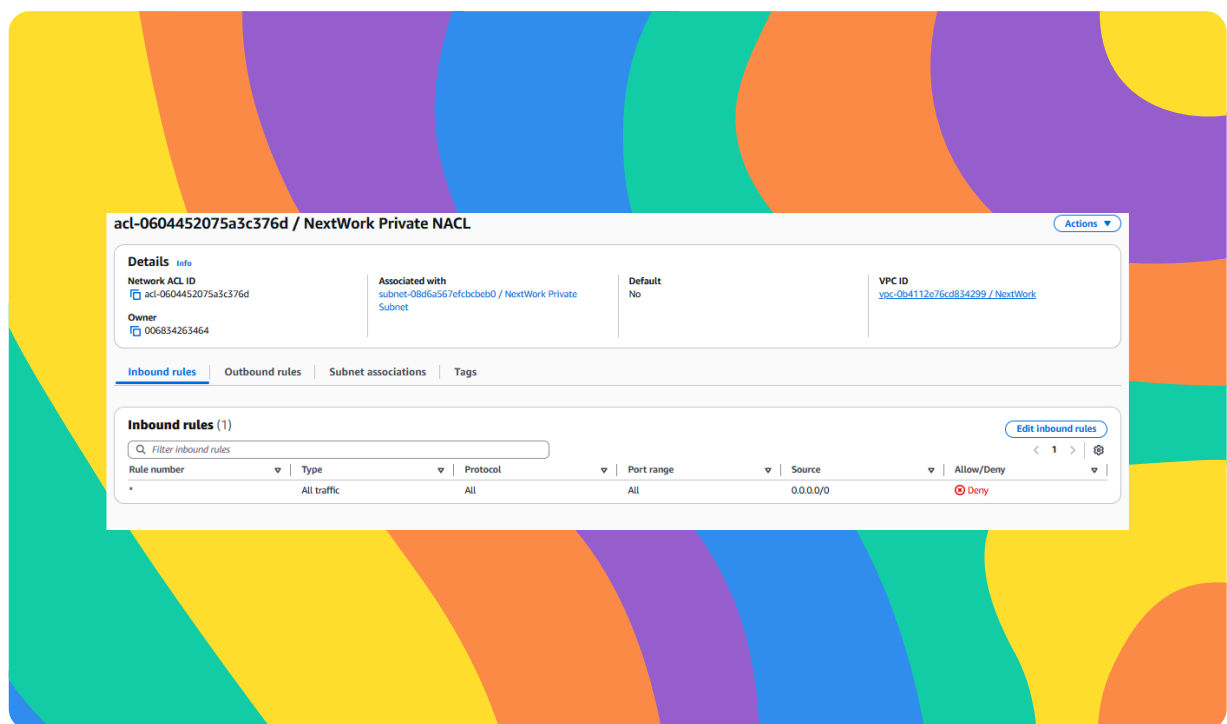

A new network ACL

By default, my private subnet is associated with the newly created private network ACL named NextWork Private NACL.

I set up a dedicated network ACL for my private subnet because I want to keep my private subnet safe.

My new network ACL has two simple rules - the traffics for both inbound and outbound are denied.

nextwork.org

The place to learn & showcase your skills

Check out nextwork.org for more projects

